"Four decades of collective struggle for justice and sovereignty in Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras"

On June 28th democratically-elected president Manuel Zelaya was ousted through a military coup carried out by School of the Americas graduates. Since then, the country has begun to see repression that mirrors the dark histories of previous decades in Central America. Come explore the histories of U.S. economic and political intervention in these three countries, the internal conflicts that resulted, and the present-day struggles against economic and geopolitical interests that they share in common.

Through a process of historical memory, we will see more clearly the importance of what it currently happening in Honduras and how to strengthen our solidarity with the defense of democracy.
